Venue:	Broadway Meeting Room, Manhattan Plaza Hotel, Brasília, Brazil

This workshop discusses ways through which it could be possible to support and, as needed, revitalize the human-influenced natural environment (or socio-ecological production landscapes) that can provide human well-being while conserving biodiversity, and introduces the Satoyama Initiative as a solution. This Initiative aims to 1) enhance understanding and raise awareness of the importance of socio-ecological production landscapes for livelihoods and the three objectives of the CBD, 2) support , where appropriate and as part of the Implementation of the post-2010 Strategic Plan, socio-ecological production landscapes through such as capacity enhancement and support on-the-ground activities, 3) collaborate with other initiatives and programmes.

Mechanisms to support the initiative will also be described, including in particular the establishment of an international partnership that will be formally launched in October in Nagoya at COP-10.

This workshop also provides efficient opportunities especially for government officials who will attend the COP-10 to have better understanding of the Satoyama Initiative, which will be discussed under the agenda item of “Sustainable use of Biodiversity”.
